THE ORIGINAL DESIGN OF THE ROAD AND WAR MEASURES.

Mr. Dudley recalls our attention to in this matter. He says:

This suggests a question. The Lex ington and Frankfort road was originally four feet eight and a half inches, to orrespond with the Northern lines, and by that Louisville was the general terns South of all the Northern lines Was not the change made in time of war, and because of a want of contidence war, and because of a want of contidence in Kentucky? Was not the design to unake Kentucky and the whole South pay tribute to the Northern States, and sepecially to the entrepot at Cincinnati? We remember the district of Kentucky. We remember that this change was unale at the instigation of Mr. Chase, of Ohio, and for the benefit of Ohio. Was it not done for the injury of Kentucky and the South, and the hence are provisions were not binding, and the south of the horizontal to be needed at the time by look Mr. Gathrie and Mr. Hauston that, in a legal point of view, those promisions were not binding, and the south, and the benefit of the North-reads to guard the interests of both reads to guard the interests of the city he South, and the benefit of the North ern States? Mr. Dudley wishes to know how we ill "reconcile the people of the interior owns to the change." There is no re-oncilement needed. If changing the nge injured the interior towns, we vould not advocate it; but what differce does it make to a town whether the milroad through it is a five feet or a four feet eight and a half inches gauge? This is another "if" of the learned President. So far from injuring, it will help se towns for Louisville to be a great rminus. The greater the prosperity f this city, the greater the prosperity of e luland Kentucky towns on rail route it. It brings their market that much interest in building un Cincinnati? The if' is on the other leg. If Mr. Dudley benetit of having the great Northern and anthern railroad center, how will be concile the Kentucky towns to his refusal? There is a very pertinent force in hat "if," which it would be well to study. We don't propose to run around any Kentucky town. We would conect all with main stems, on gange

The body of his article makes very excellent reading in the illustrations of the futility of trying to stop trade by ; lifferent gauge road; but we do not air it that, but only ask that Louisville shall have the preference, originally her own, of being the railroad center, justead of Cincinnati. A NEARO FOUND DEAD—COWARDLY MURDER.—A megro named Jim Glasscock was found dead last Saturday morning, he a field belonging to W. W. Crawbord, Esq., about four miles from his city, with a bullet hole through his head. The coroner was notified and a mry summoned. It appeared evident that the negro had been shot while isteep, with his head resting upon one of his kands. The bull entered at the temple, passed entirely through the head and hand, and was found buried in the ground. It was a minde ball, and the marks upon it indicate that it had been shot from a rifle. The matter is shrouded in mystery, but no doubt can be entertained that a cruel and cowardly murder has been perpetrated, and all
